The purpose of this consultation

In August 2015, the Commission published a "Roadmap" for the initiative 'A new start to address the challenges of work-life balance faced by working families' to replace the 2008 Commission proposal to revise the Maternity Leave Directive[1]. The objective for this initiative is to increase the participation of women in the labour market by modernising and adapting the current EU legal and policy framework to today's labour market to allow for parents with children and/or dependent relatives to better balance family and work life, allow for a greater sharing of care responsibilities between women and men, and to strengthen gender equality in the labour market.

In line with Article 154(2) TFEU, the Commission has launched the first stage consultation with the European social partners to obtain their views on the possible direction of European Union action, in particular on legislative measures concerning family leaves and flexible working arrangements that could address these challenges. In accordance with Article 155 TFEU, during the first stage consultation social partners may inform the Commission on their wish to initiate a negotiation process for a social partner's agreement. In such a case, the Commission suspends its initiative for the duration of the negotiations. If these are successfully concluded, social partners may request their agreement be implemented by the Commission presenting a proposal for a Council Decision.

Legislative and policy measures can be complementary elements in a package in order to improve work-life balance. Therefore the roadmap also outlines possible non-legislative options for the way forward, including comprehensive policy guidance to Member States in the area of work-life balance, as well as reinforced monitoring, better use of EU funds and knowledge-sharing activities.

The purpose of this consultation is to gather views on the development and implementation of a range of possible tools at EU-level to support work-life balance.

The General Secretariat of the Conference of European Churches underlines that policies concerning work-life-balance have to be seen in a wide context: they are important for individuals, families and for society as a whole. Work-life-balance is an issue for all workers, not just those with children. The long-hours working culture has not benefited families particularly as women still carry the greatest share of responsibility for child-rearing. In order to help people achieve a better work-life balance in the interests of family life, what is required is a combination of policies around childcare, maternity and paternity leave, fiscal support for those who give unpaid care, flexible working hours, career breaks, elderly care provision, regulation of working hours and avoidance of penalties in pensions or conditions of service for those who take advantage of some of these measures. The EU and its Member States should provide a legal framework for more flexible working conditions for women and men, enabling them to play their part in family life and childcare, as well as in social volunteering, without losing continuity in social security and services. The comparison of the experiences in different Member States shows that stable policies on work-life-balance have a lasting positive effect on family formation. Finally, the changing working conditions due to digitisation demand new regulations and policies to achieve a sustainable work-life-balance.
